

A short reflection on today's Gospel Matthew 14:22-33

Jesus walks on the water

Today's Gospel is richly layered in meanings. We are variously led, guided, and challenged by Jesus to prepare for the storms of existence and then to step out fearlessly into the deep and choppy waters. He invites us to move beyond our ordinary levels of understanding in order to reach new extraordinary levels of faith and spiritual consciousness. Jesus wills us to walk on water, our eyes always firmly fixed on his, our total focus always on him, at one with his power and his love.

After Jesus has sent his disciples on ahead of him in the boat, and after he has dismissed the crowds who have followed him, he goes up into the hills to a place apart to pray alone. More than once Jesus teaches by his example the need at times to draw apart from the world's distractions and offer ourselves totally to God in prayer. It is through this drawing apart from the world and offering ourselves to God in prayer that we are gifted with the courage to step out into the deep in faith and trust.

Peter's failure of faith is one with which most of us can identify: it is the terror all too familiar which can grip us when we succumb to external circumstances. Our faith sinks into the deep, taking us with it. It happens to Peter even in the presence of his beloved Jesus. He stops focusing on his Master and consequently begins to sink.

Jesus, may we always remember that you are the absolute source, and may we always stay focused on you. Then our faith and trust will not falter even in the midst of the most violent of storms. You are the calm centre; yours is the power to quell the wind and wild waters; yours is the helping hand and gentle forgiveness offered to Peter in his fear and doubt. You are my focus and I shall not be afraid.
